IV Constructing Congregations The Architecture of Synagogues, Churches and Mosques

In medieval Spain, synagogues, churches and mosques were often built in close proximity to each other and sometimes even by the same craftsmen and in the same style of architecture. Were differences between individual buildings limited to their function, or did they extend to the way that architectural space was conceived and designed? The 4th workshop in the series ArchDebates, organized in collaboration with the École Pratique des Hautes Études and Bet Tfila aims to stimulate transregional, interdisciplinary debates on the relationship between form, space and meaning in architectural history.
